| a. URL                       | https://www.apple.com                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| b. Uses Tables?              | Apple's website does not use HTML tables for layout. It uses CSS Grid and Flexbox instead, making it fully responsive across all screen sizes.                                                                                                 |
| c. Uses CSS?                 | Yes — Apple uses extensive CSS for page layout (Grid/Flexbox), typography with custom fonts, color configuration (clean black and white palette), smooth animations and transitions, and responsive breakpoints for mobile and tablet devices. |
| d. Appealing or Unappealing? | ■ Appealing                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
|                              | 1. Clean Minimalist Design: Apple uses generous white space and a simple black-and-white palette, making the page feel modern, uncluttered, and easy to read.                                                                                  |
|                              | 2. High-Quality Visuals: Every product image is large, crisp, and carefully composed, immediately communicating quality and creating an emotional connection with the visitor.                                                                 |
|                              | 3. Smooth Navigation and Responsiveness: The navigation is simple and intuitive, the site works perfectly on both desktop and mobile, and hover animations create a polished, interactive experience.                                          |
| e. Improvements?             | This page is already excellently designed. No major improvements are needed. A more prominent search bar and easier product comparison tools could be minor enhancements.                                                                      |
